Cuomo claims to have started the label in order to promote himself as an independent artist. The label was named after the mental institution where Cuomo was held for the first time as a teenager. History Beginnings In an interview with The Boston Phoenix, Cuomo stated that he first tried to set up his own record label to distribute his own records after signing his then-current band, Weezer, to a contract with Columbia Records. The label's name was taken from the NYC mental institution where Cuomo was detained at age 16. According to the interview, Cuomo then distributed his own music by printing record labels and giving them away in stacks of 500. Solo projects Cuomo also stated in the interview that his band Happy Face was one of the first groups to release music on the label. They were also the first group to release an independently distributed release. In 2014, Cuomo released his autobiography, The Good Son, which he described as a "story about my first love" and how he ended up signing with Columbia Records. Despite the book's release, Cuomo said that he will be releasing records on his own label, the Delphonics. Artists Cuomo has cited David Bowie, Blondie, Madness and the Kinks as artists whose records have been released on the label. He has also stated that he wants the label to be "the place where good bands go to record new stuff." The label has released the solo albums Seasons Don't Fail by DJ Spooky and The Odds by Stephanie Maughan.
